LAST MESSAGE.

Governor Waite Addresses the Colorado Legislature.

Makes Some Startling Assertions and Recommends Some Changes in Existing Laws.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 4.—Governor Waite read his last message to the legislature of Colorado today. It consisted of about 15,000 words, and was perhaps the most exhaustive document ever presented to the general assembly of this state. He called attention first to the fact that in spite of the destruction of the state's silver interests, the credit of Colorado was higher in New York today than ever before, and more miles of railroad were built in the state last year than in any other. He referred to the increased production of gold, and said: "But even if gold should be found in Colorado as abundantly as in California and Australia, it might relieve but would not atone for the tyranny and oppression which under both a republican and democratic president have deprived the people of the free coinage of silver—a right which was theirs before the constitution of the United States was adopted, and which was never ceded to congress."

The governor recommends that the tenth general assembly appoint a commission to investigate the excess warrant frauds committed under previous administrations, amounting to nearly $1,000,000, with a view to bringing suits against the guilty parties and their bondsmen. The governor recommends a revision of state legislation, a law to abolish the private detective system, an eight hour law and abolishment of capital punishment. He suggests that the most hardened criminals be compelled to run as candidates for some state office. After a full discussion of state land matters, the governor recommends that the state construct reservoirs and canals for irrigation purposes. He condemns the Carey land bill as "in the interest of private corporations," and recommends the general assembly "to memorialize congress to cede the arid lands to the several states in which they are situated, under conditions that the title to their lands shall forever remain in the state, to be leased in area not exceeding 160 acres, to actual settlers only."

The governor reviewed at length the city hall troubles and the Cripple Creek miners' war, and defended his action on those occasions.

He declared the time had come for agressive action on the part of the friends of free silver and said: "It is a matter of congratulation that at the last election the issues were so clearly defined and so imminent, that the devil claimed his own and the traitors who had been so long masquerading as silver democrats and populists were compelled to throw off their disguise and openly cling to the bosom of the republican party, a party responsible before God and man for the destruction of our silver product, the depreciation within the last sixteen months of all real and personal property in the state, (except money and money securities) to less than one-half their former value, and the loss of employment to thousands upon thousands of silver miners." The governor declared that during the last year the president had sent troops to Colorado and Illinois in violation of the constitutions and recommended that the assembly "memorialize congress to solemnly protest against the usurpations of the United States courts and United States marshals, who, with the aid and consent of the United States judges, have converted their offices into recruiting stations to enlist desperadoes and deputy marshals without any regard to their proper qualifications, but simply for military purposes."

In view of the fact that the sheriffs of Arapahoe and El Paso counties had "assumed military power in violation of the United States constitution and the state constitution and common law," the governor recommended the assembly "to provide some legislation to determine whether there are any rights left to the common people of the state, which sheriffs and courts are bound to respect." In conclusion the governor said: "A brief two years ago a democratic national administration arrogantly assumed power in all the departments of the government. Today that administration lies crushed and bleeding. Its success contained all the elements of its swift destruction, for the money power which controlled the party prevented any relief to the people; and so the republican party controlled by the same relentless power can grant no relief, no substantial prosperity, and would not if it could. Hence, it, too, must give way to the party of progress and reform. "The peoples party of Colorado though never in control of the general assembly and with its state officers somewhat divided and discordant, during the most exciting and troublous times that have existed in the history of the state, turn over to the incoming administrations the affairs of the state with a clean bill of health and we shall hold our dominant party to a like rigid account. I will not say, 'hail and farewell.' That would be too formal. We go, but we return. We will meet you, gentlemen, in two years at Philadelphia."

TAHSIN PASHA.

The Turkish Newspapers Say He Was Not Assassinated.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 4.—The Turkish newspapers deny the reported assassination of Tahsin Pasha, governor of Bitlis, saying that the story arose from the death of Hellmi Bey, the vali of Seras, which it is claimed was due to natural causes. The newspapers of this city also publish a dispatch from Tahsin Pasha stating that all is tranquil in the province of Bitlis. The imperial decree giving notification of the election of Mgr. Izmirlian as Armenian patriarch in succession to Mgr. Achikian, who recently resigned on account of difficulties, but its porte and the Patriarchiate, was issued without the usual demand that the patriarch should promise to pursue a line of conduct consentient with the views of the Turkish government, which promise Mgr. Izmirlian refused to give. The reports received here as to the situation of affairs in Macedonia are disquieting. This is due to the extension of brigandage. The porte is making enquiries on the subject.

HAWAII AGAIN.

Senator Lodge Brings the Question Up in the Senate.

Severely Criticised the Administration for Withdrawing Warships From the Harbors of the Islands.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Less than twenty senators were in their seats today when Vice President Stevenson called the senate to order. After the journal had been approved and the routine morning business transacted, Mr. Lodge, (repn.) of Massachusetts, addressed the senate upon his resolution of inquiry as to why the United States warships had been withdrawn from Honolulu. Mr. Lodge said: "At the beginning of the session I introduced a resolution asking for the reports and correspondence of Admiral Walker in regard to Hawaii. My motive in so doing was because I believed the opinions and observations of a distinguished and able naval officer, who is necessarily outside of all politics, would be of great value to us in understanding the condition of affairs there and in reaching a proper knowledge of our relations with those islands. Admiral Walker's papers were, as I had anticipated, most valuable on these points. They showed that to a disinterested observer, actuated by no motive but the interests of the United States, it was perfectly clear that our true policy was the annexation of those islands. They confirmed in this way the views expressed by the senate in a resolution of last summer and which I believe are the views held by substantially all the American people except those concerned in the present administration. All this was valuable information, but Admiral Walker's last letter brought out strongly a highly important point which had thus far not been appreciated. It was known to us then through the press that all of our war ships had been withdrawn from Hawaii and that, although several were lying idle at Mare Island, none had been sent back to Honolulu. The letter of Admiral Walker to which I referred discloses in a striking way the danger and impolicy of this course and also proves that our government had been warned in regard to it by an officer entitled to speak on such a point with the authority of an expert. Admiral Walker says with great frankness that if the British minister of war, as well as our own, had been withdrawn, it might have been a good thing—certainly it would have done no harm to the stability of government in the island." He then referred to the manner in which England reached out to increase her possessions, and asserted that the British ships encouraged the Hawaiian royalists, while the absence of the American vessel gave encouragement to a counter revolution. He also referred to the fact that Japan had a war ship at Hawaii. He said the importance of Hawaii to the United States could not be over estimated, and would become greater upon the completion of the Nicaraguan canal. He continued: "Under such circumstances to leave those islands without the countenance and protection of an American ship of war to leave our interests in Pearl Harbor and the interest of our citizens unguarded appears to me wrong in the very highest degree. What motive actuates the administration in this extraordinary policy it is impossible to say. If it is their desire to throw the Sandwich islands into the hands of Great Britian, as they have openly proposed to do with Samoa, then the action is comprehensible, but nothing else explains it. Such a policy is so unpatriotic, however, that it is difficult to conceive that it should be entertained. It seems to me that in view of the vast importance of the Sandwich Islands to this country that great wrong has been committed in withdrawing our ships at this moment and that a man-of-war should be sent there at once. It is for this reason that I have introduced this resolution of inquiry and I think our government owes it to the people to send a man-of-war to Honolulu without delay. If they do not do this they will have no right to remain silent as to their reasons for such an extraordinary course."

INDIANA NEWS.

A Carroll County Suit Ends Very Abruptly.

Wabash Has a Child Stealing Case—The Secretary of State Incorporates Two Big Firms.

DELPHI, Ind., Jan. 4.—For several weeks the people living in the neighborhood of Flora have been interested in the Westfall-Thomas controversy, which at one time almost resulted in a tragedy, but which now appears to have been brought to a conclusion by the sudden disappearance of Westfall. Several weeks ago Charles Thomas went to the residence of Miss Lillian Peterson to escort that young lady to church. Sydney Westfall, a bachelor, sixty years old, boards at the Peterson house, and has for months been extremely jealous of Miss Lillian. He ordered young Thomas off the premises, and when that young gentleman refused to obey he attacked him with a club. The young man then turned on the old fellow and administered a terrible beating, and he also filed an affidavit against him for assault. The matter came up in Flora, and Westfall was bound over to the circuit court. Just before judgment was rendered, however, the gray haired combatant quietly arose and left the court room, since which time he has not been seen. It now turns out that he has deeded his farm to a friend and has left Carroll county permanently. He was unduly alarmed, being of the impression that he was likely to receive a penitentiary sentence for his assault on Thomas.

WABASH, Ind., Jan. 4.—Phillip Scott, of El Reno, I. T., came to Wabash yesterday and stole his four-year-old daughter from his divorced wife. Scott married his wife in Kansas five years ago and they soon after moved to El Reno. There he is alleged to have maltreated her and she procured a divorce and the custody of the child and was brought to Wabash by her relatives. Scott came here and charged his ex-wife with improper conduct. Last Monday he assaulted William McClelland because of his jealousy, giving him a terrific beating. Yesterday morning he loitered about Mrs Scott's home till the little girl appeared, when he grabbed her and ran for the Big Four train southward. Officers are after him. Much excitement was caused by the kidnapping and the mother of the child is frantic.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Jan. 4.—In accordance with the recent decision of the supreme court, classifying bicycles as vehicles, the directors of the Burlington pike have adopted a resolution to hereafter charge all wheelmen one cent per mile. The road is one of the favorite rides out of the city, and its new source of revenue promises to be an important item.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 4.—Articles of association of two big companies were filed in the office of the secretary of state. The Union Steel company, of Alexandria, was the first to be legalized. It has a capital of $500,000 and is a union of the Depauw Steel company and the Bessemer steel works. It is the intention of the incorporators to build one of the largest steel factories in the country and to work 1,000 men at the beginning, thus doubling the population of Alexandria. The other company is the Madison County Belt Railway, organized to encircle Alexandria and the suburban villages. The latter's capital is $150,000. The same projectors are behind both concerns.

ABODE FOR TRAMPS

Discovered by the Police in New York City.

NEW YORK, Jan 4.—A peculiar abode for the tramping individuals of the country was discovered by Policeman Leggitt, of the West 100th street station in a vacant lot at Columbus avenue and 95th street. While patroling his beat the officer noticed smoke apparently arising from a pile of snow. Prompted a great deal by curiosity, he approached the place and his curiosity was turned into amazement. As he began to investigate the mystery there was a sliding sound as if a panel door was slid open and he heard voices coming from the ground. In a moment a man's head was shoved through an opening and a voice from the head demanded of Policeman Leggitt what he wanted.

"What are you doing?" asked the officer, scenting a great "haul."

The head disappeared and the voice was heard to say:

"Cheese it, Jim; here's a cop."

The officer crawled through the hole and gazed in astonishment about him. He was in a cave about seven feet long by nine feet wide and six feet high. There was a small table, an improvised stove, a lighted candle, shelves, a chest, and even chromos on the wall. The place was in fact a warm and cozy sleeping apartment. The beds were raised mounds of earth covered with straw. The men were playing cards when the officer interrupted them. They were arrested and in the Harlem police court when charged with disorderly conduct gave the names of John Smith and James Averson. They were discharged by Justice Weld with the advice that they give up their underground apartment.

Death of James Walker.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 4.—James M. Walker, formerly associated with Fair, Flood, Mackey and O'Brien in mining ventures, is dead, and will be buried soon after his old partner, ex-Senator Fair. Unlike him, however, he leaves no estate to contest. Walker accumulated millions and went to Philadelphia in 1872. He lived luxuriously and lavishly. His millions were soon lost in unfortunate speculations in railroads and stocks.

ASYLUM BURNED.

The Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane

Visited by Fire—All of the Patients Escaped From the Building Except One.

ANNA, Ill., Jan. 4.—The center building and south wing of the southern Illinois hospital for the insane has been burning since 11:50 last night. The building contained nearly 600 patients, all of whom it is thought were gotten out safely, with one exception, that of a lady who is supposed to have perished in the flames. She was observed on the fourth floor of the center building, dressed only in her night clothes. None of the attendants or patients had time to secure their clothing, and the snow worked a great hardship in transferring the patients to other quarters. It is now thought none of those confined in the asylum are at large, though desperate attempts at escape were made during the progress of the fire, and it was with great difficulty that the poor creatures were confined to their quarters. They were crowded into a new building already nearly full. The patients will be taken care of in the best possible manner under the circumstances. The loss will exceed $400,000. The fire department from Cairo is here and think they have the fire under control. The center buildings and south wing are completely destroyed.

Are the Remains of the Late Bishop Knickerbacher.

Fifteen Bishops and One Hundred Prelates Assist Bishop Tuttle in the Impressive Service.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 4.—The funeral of Bishop Knickerbacher was held from the St. Paul Cathedral, in this city, at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The services were conducted by Bishop D. S. Tuttle, of Missouri. There were fifteen bishops and nearly one hundred prelates present and assisted Bishop Tuttle, and the services were most impressive. Proceding the interment at Crown Hill, there was a memorial service and celebration of holy communion at Grace Cathedral.

THE ICE CROP.

Large Quantities Are Being Harvested in New York.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Jan. 4.—The Hudson ice crop is now ready to harvest and the quality was never better. Cutting is already in progress at Coxsackie and other points north, and by Monday next the work will be in full operation at all points unless the weather conditions change radically. The crop has matured much earlier than usual, about a month in advance of last year, being much favored by the clear zero temperature. Only about 200,000 tons of the old crop is left over from the demands of the hot summer and this is held by the Knickerbocker company. The full storage capacity of the river is now about 4,000,000 tons, no material increase having been made since last year. Of this, the Knickerbocker has nearly half. It is estimated that nearly 10,000 men and boys and one thousand horses are employed in the river ice harvest in the height of the season, but with the improved mechanical appliances in use, only fourteen working days are required to house the crop, and the work is awaited with the greatest activity by thousands of men and their needy families. The average cost of housing the crop here is estimated at about twenty cents per ton. The wages range from one to two dollars a day. No definite rate has been fixed so far this season. An effort to use steam in cutting the ice from the river is being made by Charles Mulford, of the Glasgow company, and at Barryton, the National company has placed corrugators on all the elevators which are designed to scratch off the soft snow and ice from the cakes as they ascend into the house.

New Railroad.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 4.—Engineer J. T. McWilliams has completed the survey of a railroad route from Flagstaff, Arizona, to the largest point of the Grand Canon of the Colorado, thirty-five miles away. Another new railway project that is under consideration is the construction of a new road from some point on the Fort Worth and Denver near Amarillo, Tex., through the Pecos valley to Roswell, N. M.

Although potatoes are so plentiful and cheap that they scarcely pay for the raising this year, yet there is one region of the world where they are so scarce as to be classed among rare fruits. That is in the Argentine Republic. Why do not enterprising American merchants ship several hundred vessel loads of our best potatoes at once to Argentina? If they were really enterprising, they would do so.

A man or a corporation that will try to get out of paying an honest debt because there is some loophole of a legal technicality through which it is possible to crawl is about as mean as they make them.

WELL HOUSED

Are the Japanese Soldiers in Manchuria.

The Reported Repetition of Valley Forge or Napoleon's Army in the Snows of Russia is Only Imagination

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Japanese authorities have not received any information concerning the reported extreme suffering of the Japanese soldiers from the cold in China. Chancellor Nakayama, of the legation, states today that it was fully understood that the vigorous climate in Manchuria would prove hard on those Japanese soldiers coming from the south of Japan. The soldiers from the northern islands are a hardy class, accustomed to six feet of snow and ice in the winter. The first army corps in Manchuria is made up of mixed regiments from the north and south. Mr Nakayama says, however, that full precaution has been taken against the cold. The army is provided with an ample supply of woolens, goat skins, and, moreover, it has captured so many towns that it has shelter in the pagodas, temples, etc., so that few soldiers are left exposed in tents. There is an ample supply of wood and coal in China. The army at Port Arthur is well housed. Under these circumstances the minister says the hardships will be those inevitable to a winter campaign, but that they have not, so far as reports are received, indicated an extreme of suffering which might threaten a repetition of Valley Forge or the memorable repulse of Napoleon's army by the snows of Russia.

HYPNOTISM.

It Will Figure Prominently in the Blixt Trial.

The Attorneys for the Defense Hope to Advance Their Cause by Scientific Methods.

LACROSSE, Wis., Jan. 4.—Herbert L. Flint, the hypnotist, who is giving exhibitions in this city, has received the following letter from R. R. Odell, of Minneapolis, attorney and counsel for Claus A. Blixt, the self-confessed murderer of Miss Catherine Ging:

"MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 1, '95.

"To Herbert L. Flint, Esq.:

"MY DEAR SIR:—I wish to see you before you return to Chicago, and even if this letter does not reach you at Eu Claire, and is forwarded to Chicago, even then it would be of mutual benefit to us both to meet as soon as possible. In brief, I am the sole attorney and counsel for Claus A. Blixt, in the case made famous by its extraordinary peculiarities, which I cannot explain to you by letter. This much I will say, that I shall require the services of you or some one versed in mental philosophy. Therefore, I wish to see you right away. Let me hear from you soon. I am yours truly,

(Signed) R. R. ODELL.

"It is probably the theory of the defense," said Mr. Flint today, "that I can so influence Blixt by hypnotism that the condition of his story in which he has been since his confession will subside and many of Harry Hayward's alleged participation in the murder will be brought to light."

It is also expected that it will be proven beyond all doubt that Blixt was compelled to commit the murder while under hypnotic influence. It was through Professor Flint's efforts that the story of the Mable Briggs case at Eu Claire, Wis., was brought out, and this is probably the reason Mr. Odell is now seeking his services. Professor Flint has asked Mr. Odell for further particulars and will probably go to Minneapolis at the close of his engagement in this city on Saturday next.

THREE CHURCHES UNITE

And Will Inaugurate Revival Services in This City.

Rev. Alexander Patterson, the Chicago Evangelist, Has Been Secured and Will Commence Work During February.

From all over the country comes the news of great religious awakenings, and the year 1895 promises to be one that will witness wonderful victories for the cause of Christ and humanity.

Only a week ago the two Methodist churches of this city closed a successful revival which lasted for ten weeks and at the present time services of this character are being conducted by several other churches here.

Now comes the three Presbyterian churches who have secured that earnest and widawake evangelist, Rev. Alexander Patterson, of Chicago, who will commence revival meetings here about the middle of February. He has been engaged for three weeks and the services will be conducted one week in each church. Rev. Patterson has secured a national reputation as an evangelist and wherever he has been many conversions have been reported.

The Bethany Presbyterian church have secured the services of State Evangelist Aikman, who will commence a series of meetings after the week of prayer which takes place in all the Presbyterian churches and many other churches next week.

MISS LEO LONG.

Our Sweet Soprano Wins Honors at Columbus, Ohio.

In a Musical Contest She Wins the Prize for Delphos and Divides Honors for the Soprano Solo.

At the musical contest held at Columbus, Ohio, on New Years day, Miss Leo Long, one of the sweetest singers of this city and a young lady who is accorded the most favorable reception whenever she sings in public, won the highest honors.

In the contest between the choruses in which there were many contestants, she sang in the quartette for the Delphos chorus, "How Great and Wonderful," from Spohr's last judgment, and her artistic efforts won for that chorus a prize of $100 and a gold medal.

She also participated in the soprano solo contest, in which there were sixteen contestants, numbering among them professional singers from Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Springfield and other cities, and divided the first prize with Mrs. Healy, a distinguished soprano from Cincinnati.

Miss Long was a pupil of Prof. William Miles, of this city, who was her only teacher. She has a magnificent voice, is one of the most artistic singers of the city, and Fort Wayne is proud of the honors which have come to her.

ARTHUR L. HILL.

Demise of a Well Known Young Man—The Nash Funeral.

At 10 o'clock last evening occurred the death of Arthur L. Hill, at his home on Prospect avenue, on the north side. The deceased had been ill with typhoid fever for almost four weeks, but it was not generally known among his friends that he was so dangerously ill, and the announcement of his death will be a surprise and shock to them. The deceased was thirty one years old and unmarried. Up to the time of his recent illness he was employed as book keeper for Robert Ogden, the plumber. Charles L. Hill, the well known music dealer, is the father of the deceased. The remaining relatives are Mrs. Mable Clayton, of this city, Miss Alice Hill, a teacher in the public schools at Minneapolis, and another married sister living out of the city. The deceased was an excellent young man and all his life had been spent in this city. He had a large circle of friends and acquaintances. He was a member of Trinity Episcopal church. The arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

The St. John's Reformed church congregation have elected the following officers for the ensuing year.

Elders—Messrs. Eisinger and Wellmeyer.

Deacons—Messrs. Bierbaum and Workman.

Rev. Bosch, the new pastor, has arrived and will preach his first sermon next Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock. The pastor is a young man and an earnest, eloquent speaker.

SAUVAGE CONCERT

Our Music Lovers Turn Out Liberally to Hear the Famous Singer.

The grand concert in the Westminster church last evening, given by Mr. James Sauvage and his son, Tonio, was a great treat to those of our citizens who were so fortunate as to be present. In fact the singing of the elder Sauvage and the piano playing of the young man were never excelled in this city. Mr. Sauvage has a wonderful voice, and he sings with such ease that the listener is impressed with the idea that there is unlimited power held in reserve, although the singer is rendering difficult music all the while. The Messrs. Sauvage will leave tonight for New York, where they will sing in the choir of one of the leading churches next Sunday. While in the city they were the guests of Prof. and Mrs. Miles, who are old time friends.

POLICE COURT NOTES.

Five Prisoners Were On Trial This Morning.

A Very Smart Youth Who Was Playing the Stupid Dodge—Other Police Station Jottings.

Five prisoners were on trial at police court this morning.

Jas. Detroix was a black eyed youth of twenty-one who was something of an oddity. Late yesterday afternoon Officer Foulks was called to the jewelry store of Green & Trulsson, in the Arcade. Detroix was sitting by the store in what appeared to be a drunken stupor. Foulks shook him several times and asked the fellow where he was from. The young man opened his eyes and looked about him in a vacant sort of a way but uttered never a word. Finally the officer got the stranger on his feet and then he finally drawled out, "Say, mister, can you tell me the length of a twelve inch foot?" Thinking the fellow crazy, the officer sent him to the station house in the patrol. While being searched Detroix said he had his shoes full of nitro glycerine. But this was found to be only a little joke. When asked if he had anything to say to the charge of drunkenness this morning the prisoner told a very straightforward story, using most excellent language. In fact, the fellow was a genuine puzzle. He said he had been offered a position at the Olds Wagon works next week. The mayor told him that if this was found to be true he would be released from jail in time to take the place. It is believed by the officers that Detroix is smarter than chained lightning and what he was up to in the jewelry store is surmised. He said his home was in Detroit.

Frank J. Mitchell, Ed King and Thos. O'Neill were drunken tramps who were begging about the streets. All were sent to jail for ten days.

John Quigley was a vagrant who has been loafing about the streets for the past two weeks. He was sent to jail for fourteen days.

A POOR OLD LADY.

Last evening a poor old lady named Mary Hooley applied at the station house for a place to sleep all night and was locked up in one of the cells. Although eighty-seven years of age the unfortunate creature is compelled to go about selling pins for a living. The sum total of her earnings yesterday was eight cents. The woman is quite intelligent and stated that she had but few relatives living. Her husband died in Fort Wayne in 1845.

FOUND HIS FLAG

Two years ago John Stoehr, of No. 122 East Washington street, missed a fine large American flag, worth $25. Yesterday Mr. Stoehr went to the barn of Peter Deutschman, on Lewis street, and found the long lost bunting hidden in the loft, it having been overlooked when the officers searched the barn. Yesterday the Pennsylvania company identified the breech loading shot gun stolen by Deutschman as their property. Mr. Stoehr is still minus ninety yards of carpeting stolen from him at the same time the flag was taken.

GEORGE RYAN FINED.

George Ryan was up for trial this morning on the charge of fast driving. He plead not guilty but the officers testified that Ryan was driving at an alarming fast speed up and down the streets and the mayor fined him $1 and costs.

THREE DAYS ONLY.

A new rule has been adopted at the police station. Hereafter tramps who apply for loding for more than three consecutive nights will be arrested and sent to jail.

SOME AMENDMENTS

Mayor Oakley is in hopes that at the coming session of the Indiana legislature the Fort Wayne charter can be so amended as to give the mayor the casting of the tie vote in the city council. The duties of the city clerk will also be further defined in order to allow him to help the mayor with the police docket.

MORTALLY WOUNDED.

Sheriff Vanarsdale Shoots Dr. F. L. Harred.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 4.—A special to the Times from Harrodsburg, Ky., says: "Sheriff John T. Vanarsdale has just shot and mortally wounded Dr. F. L. Harred.

The particulars are impossible to get at this hour (1 p. m.) but it is supposed to be over some cards circulated in the late election in detriment to Vanarsdale's election and character. Both are married men.

HON. JULIUS C. BURROWS was nominated last night for the short term senatorship on the second ballot by the Michigan legislature. The ballot was as follows: J. C. Burrows, 7-, John Patton, 25, S. S. Olds, 23; C. Hubbell, 1. The term will expire March 1, 1899.

A GREAT many incorporated societies, secret and otherwise, do not know that it is necessary to have a standing in court for them to have the proceedings in connection with the election of trustees duly recorded by the county recorder each year, or if they know it, they do not comply with the law. In case it ever becomes necessary to have legal proceedings, it is important that legal requirements have been complied with.

TOWNSHIP trustees will have a task to perform this year which they are required to do once every six years. It is that of enumerating the voters in the various townships. The work can be done any time between now and the first of July, and will show the name and age of all male persons over the age of twenty-one. This is done to be used for re-districting the state for legislative purposes. It will not be completed in time to be of any service to the present legislature.

THE opinion expressed some weeks ago by THE SENTINEL is echoed and forcibly put by the Muncie Herald when it says: "The coming legislature can do some good work along the line of correcting the evils in connection with the office of prosecutor and [illegible] the [illegible]. Also, fix the law so that the [illegible] be put on a salary and thus remove the suspicion that the desire for a fee on the part of an officer is greater than his desire to further the ends of justice."

FARMERS' institutes throughout the state have been passing resolutions asking that complete statistics of live stock and crops shall be collected. Secretary Kennedy of the state board of agriculture, some time ago suggested that the assessors, in their annual rounds during the month of April, be instructed to collect the facts and report them to the state board of agriculture. The report could be published by June 1, he says, giving the latest news of the crops then growing. The suggestion is certainly sensible, and appears entirely practicable.

ADVANCED IDEAS

Concerning the Saloon and Its Influence.

A Prominent Catholic Citizen Tells of the Position Taken by the Leading Divines of That Church.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Those editors who use their intellectual powers in defence of the saloon, and cry aloud because all laws are not enforced, do not comprehend the trend of the times. They place themselves in the line of back numbers and demagogues when they state their positions on the gambling rooms and houses of prostitution.

The people understand, if saloon advocates do not, that the saloons are the hot houses where the victims are prepared for the lower degradation of the gambling hells and houses of ill fame. Without the saloon in its present degraded position one half of the other degrading influences would disappear.

The best evidence possible that the saloonkeeper is a natural, persistent and premeditated violator of all laws, divine and civil, is the fact that he opposes the screen ordinance, and that the saloons has screens at all proves that the business is disgraceful and disreputable. The churches, of whatever sect, Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist and those of the various Reformed churches, all ignore and condemn the saloon.

The Episcopal, though conservative, is not a saloonist, while the Lutheran and Roman Catholic, made up as they are largely of foreigners, have set their seal of condemnation on this accursed business.

Lutheran divines openly express their views against, not only the abuse of the business, but against the saloon itself as conducted in this country.

The Roman Catholic church, which has suffered most in the eyes of the American people on account of the saloon, because so many of its alleged members are in the business, has in no uncertain way set its seal of condemnation on the business. Years ago in its council at Baltimore it described the business as dangerous, and advised pastors to induce Catholics to get out of it. This rule was approved by the pope. Hence any so called Catholic in the saloon traffic is in rebellion against his church.

All the older and intellectual Catholic divines in this country have been outspoken against the saloon business.

Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, Bishop Spaulding, of Peoria, the leaders and controllers of the Catholic university at Washington, with the great Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, all unite against the deleterious effects of the saloon business. Besides hosts of bishops, from Detroit to New Orleans, and from Vermont to the Pacific slope, unite with one voice against the saloon.

The American people should take a more accurate view of the position, of the church of Rome on the saloon question, and they will find nine tenths of the so called Catholic saloon keepers are foreigners, or those brought up in peculiar foreign surroundings. They will find that the teaching of the church on the question is correct, and that when the indications show a lax discipline on the saloon question, the fault will be found to arise from this source.

The brave Bishop Watterson, American by four generations, understanding fully the teachings of his church, set the seal of condemnation squarely on the saloon business. He set the gait, and said that no saloonkeeper should be an officer in the Catholic societies of his diocese; that hereafter no saloonkeeper should become a member of the Catholic societies under his control. In a word branding the saloonkeeper as unworthy to associate in Catholic societies. An appeal was taken to the apostolic delegate and the bishop's position was sustained.

The few Catholics of intelligence who attempt to straddle the issue by stating that the church does not condemn the saloon if properly kept, know that there is no such saloon in this country as will fill the church's requirements.

The Rector of Abernathey.

[illegible] At some [illegible] He had put me down [illegible] I was weary [illegible] strapped from the boot, but the [illegible] all left me, and the [illegible] compact volume [illegible]

[illegible] stood the [illegible]. It was a beautiful building. [illegible] about the style [illegible] It simply seemed to be [illegible] of an exquisite taste. There [illegible] suggestive of fortification or defense, like those of the [illegible] Elizabethan styles; it was not [illegible] the [illegible] Italian order nor yet of the modern pointed gothic. It was a sort of compromise between the latter, probably what might be called the Anglo-Saxon, and [illegible] peculiarly adapted to the artificial landscape gardening in the front and the naturalness of the [illegible] woods and the frowning hills in the background. There was no [illegible] gilded turrets and such [illegible] conceits that lower the dignity of a house; true, there were terraces, but they were ornamental accompaniments—they imparted an [illegible] to the whole group of buildings.

The approach to the house was through a broad, [illegible] and on either side with a variety of trees planted with the [illegible] effect. I [illegible] the white poplar mingling with the dark green of the [illegible] here and there with the [illegible] tints of the sycamore and the purple beech. The gardens glowed with the same inspiration of beauty and taste. From where I stood my eye could not criticise their regularity, but I saw the outlined hedges of blossoming hawthorn, the flower beds encircled with their ribbons of boxwood, and the gay petunia flaunting beside the humble violet and the bee haunted thyme.

I felt that the spirit which presided over that exquisite blending of nature and art was thoroughly an artist, not simply of the appreciative but of the creative school. He was more of an artist than the painter on canvas. The latter commences with a tabula rasa; his pencil is subject to his will: he puts down a rock here and a brooklet there and works in his buildings and trees as taste may suggest or the laws of perspective demand. Then he can remove with the same facility with which he creates. The landscape gardener must accept localities as he finds them; he must conceal deformities and create beauties. The greater and more numerous the difficulties he has to surmount, the more superior to the landscape painter is his taste and genius.

Beware of the man, says some one, who loves neither flowers nor children. There is not simply a speciousness about that remark. It is the embodiment of truth. We are conscious of the weight and importance of the caution, no matter how limited our experience. As I gazed upon the scene before me I felt convinced that the proprietor of Abernathey Hall loved both flowers and children; that he was a gentleman of refined sensibilities, a Christian and a scholar. I had come to act as governess to his children. I had misgivings in reference to my new home. My conjectures of harshness and a want of appreciation at times made me almost shrink away from duty. But I was satisfied and wholly at ease as I sat there upon the baggage which made up the sum of my earthly possessions.

And yet there was much of regret connected with it—not on account of myself, but on account of another. We read that William Morton, Kane's friend and companion, stood alone when he gazed upon the unfrozen Polar sea, surging and rolling beneath him. The soul of De Soto, when he first beheld the Mississippi, was not touched with half the grandeur and sublimity. The dream of philosophy was a reality; the inductions of science a truth; the open Polar sea was found!

The chilling grandeur of the snow, the palaces of ice, ideal Alhambras glittering like a thousand stars, the gigantic stairways of pearl, surmounted by the brilliant arch of the aurora—but, above all, the oppressiveness of that hour of solitude and silence—stirred his soul with a thousand kindling emotions. But he stood there alone; he had no friend to realize with him that half awakening dream of magnificence, to whom he could relieve his surcharged heart by speech; to whom he could point out this or that object of attraction. The oppressiveness of his loneliness was like a despair, it was the struggle of longing and regret; he would even have grasped irreverently at the ghostly hand of Sir John Franklin had he come out from his icy tomb to stand beside him there.

It was something of this regret that I felt in my soul. My mind went back to the close, crowded city, with its sea of heated roofs, noisy factories, dusty streets and interminable walls of masonry. I thought of my sister Alice, with her dark spiritual eyes, brighter than the hectic flush upon her cheeks. Poor invalid child! How I wished that she was standing beside me, feeling the same cool breeze fanning her brow and gazing upon the same changing vistas of scenery; standing beside me so that I could talk to her! But she was not there, and the tears came into my eyes as I thought about it; the silver abele grew indistinct, and there was a shadowiness about the blossoming lilacs.

I was soon started out of my reverie. I heard voices on the avenue, and in a moment afterward Mr. Ashley reached out his hand to me in his kind way, while the servant shouldered my trunks.

I read my employer at a glance; there was not much individuality necessary to do that. His temperament was sanguine, with enough of the phlegmatic to give him calmness and dignity. He was still a young man, well formed and with that intellectual expression upon his face which comes to men who read and think much. His lips and eyes betrayed his good nature. They would have given their impressions of geniality to a very child.

He chatted gayly as we walked toward the house. He did so partly to relieve me from embarrassment and partly because it was his nature. Perhaps he noticed, too, that I had been weeping. I already felt as if I had known him for years. There was no ostentation or mock pride about him. [illegible] evidently put on.

"Carrie," said Mr. Ashley, as we [illegible], "this is your new [illegible]."

[illegible] a beautiful child [illegible] [illegible]

Carrie is both a grim and impulsive m[illegible]

[illegible]

"What is your name?" she asked.

"Jenny Grey."

"Oh, I like that. You won't make me call you Miss Grey, will you? But I can [illegible] so many questions. Only I want you to see Fred."

She left the room, returning in a minute or two with her brother. I was soon upon good terms with him. He closely resembled his father; had the same light, curling hair, calm gray eyes and expressive lips. He was not so talkative as Carrie; he was more thoughtful and reserved, more observing and less impulsive.

I was in due time thoroughly installed in my new home. I had much to bless my heavenly father for; my lines were cast in pleasant places. The summer went by, and the winter, in the same quiet, steady, happy way. But I do not intend to speak about my duties at Abernathey Hall, my tutorship of those lovely children, and how in beautifying their lives my own grew beautiful. It is with the new awakening, the new El Dorado of my companionship, my intimacy with the rector, that I have to do.

He was standing at one of the windows on the morning that Mr. Ashley introduced me to him. He turned round, nodded gravely and then gazed out of the window as abstractedly as before. I was not piqued at that. I am not proud and (so my friends tell me) put too low an estimate upon myself. Though his survey of me was not a leisurely one, I knew that he had already divined as much of my life and character as a less penetrating man would have learned in a week. It took me that long to engage him even in the most incidental conversation.

He was a sedate, even tempered man. He was often given to fits of absentmindedness, and from this I learned that there was some great sorrow in his soul. It was only in the pulpit that he proved himself more than an ordinary man. He was an analytical reasoner, subject to bursts of the most captivating eloquence and strong in the yearning for the salvation of his fellow men. The light seemed to go out of his eyes and the spiritual glory out of his face so soon as he descended from the pulpit. Few stepped into the aisles to grasp him by the hand, they simply bowed their heads with the memory of the recently spoken words of truthfulness in their souls and a sort of sympathy for the secret sorrowfulness which raised him above the plane of their companionship.

But there came a time when he took a deeper interest in me; when his eyes would neglect his book to follow me around the room; when he would meet me with a nosegay, or ask me to stroll with him through the gardens. I found him a more agreeable companion than I had supposed him to be. He would come out of that half dreamy lethargy in which he seemed to sit and converse as if he thought and felt like other men. I must say that he even became communicative. He spoke less reservedly and less spasmodically. At first I conversed, and he listened, but by degrees and unconsciously, as it were, our positions became reversed. Then it was that I stood upon the confines of the new El Dorado in the world of thought. It was something grand to sit at his feet, a quiet, impressible pupil.

I must say it sooner or later, and so I will say it now. I loved him! Yes, warmly, fervently, passionately. I did not know whether my love was reciprocated, neither did I care. The knowledge of the deep love in my own heart was enough for me to dwell upon at any one time. To be sure, his eyes at times warmed up with a beautiful light, and he would exhibit the most earnest solicitude for a temporary ache or illness, but beyond this I observed nothing. He did not speak of love. What I had noticed might have been a merely occasioned by his strong friendship for me.

I was one day reading Goethe's "Dichtung und Wahrheit" (Poetry and Truth). Mr. Jackson observed the work in my hands.

"Is Goethe a favorite of yours?" he asked.

"Very much so," I replied.

"His works have never been faithfully translated, and least of all the one you are now reading. It is not even second-handed. It is what Mrs. Austin called 'a bad translation of a very bad French translation.' Two elements enter into every translation—the author and the translator. Thus, Hoole's 'Ariosto' is nearer to Hoole than to Ariosto. So in Pope's 'Homer.' The Greek is nothing, the Englishman everything. Translations have been called pressed flowers. If you want to enjoy Goethe in all his freshness and fragrance, you must go to the original. In no other way will you be able thoroughly to appreciate him."

"Do you understand German, Mr. Jackson?" I asked.

"I have been told that I am a perfect master of the language. I have Goethe's works in my library. You must study German."

Well, I mastered German. The study was a pleasure and a recreation. I caught the inspiration from the very lips, as it were, of Goethe and Heine and Schiller. I learned, too, the truthfulness of Coleridge's definition of genius—that it consists in carrying on the feelings of the child into maturer years. Men of true genius give themselves up to the first simple impressions of common things. They are content to wonder and smile and admire, just as they did when they were children. It is the opening of the heart to all sweet influences.

We are not called upon to write poetry for [illegible]—for men who work and think and suffer. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

But that literary [illegible] also became a [illegible] "to love" in that rich, full, sonorous dia[illegible]

had [illegible] to love the German, but Mr. Jackson [illegible]

Well [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] the gates [illegible] Mr. Jackson [illegible] people [illegible] away from him. Fred [illegible] a little child, [illegible] to me [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] life with the [illegible] all its shadowiness and dread.

All [illegible] it was to be. Mr. Jackson spoke to me of love. It was on a cold starlit night in March. We were standing by one of the broad windows, looking out upon the landscape, which was beautiful still, though clothed in the dreariness of winter.

"Jenny," he commenced half sorrowfully, "I am about to say something that may lower me very much in your estimation, but I cannot help it. It has been in my heart for many weeks. It has wrapped it like the landscape before us, in all the chilliness of winter. Whether what I may say will bring sunshine and spring, or leave me still standing an Ishmael in this desert of my life, I cannot tell."

He paused a moment, and I thought I heard my heart beat in that stillness. I had a consciousness of what was coming.

He paused a moment, and I thought I heard my heart beat.

"Go on, Leonard," I said. "Let me be Hagar to you."

"No, no!" he cried with considerable vehemence. "You must be more. You must be my Rebecca—my Leah!"

"I will be anything you wish," I said. I was surprised at the calmness with which I said that; I was not surprised that I was thoroughly happy. He took me in his arms and kissed me passionately.

"We love each other, Jenny."

This was said so slowly, so measuredly, that it caused me to look up into his face.

"We have loved each other for a long while, Leonard. I am very, very happy! How could you possibly lower yourself in my estimation by such an avowal? How I wish that words of mine could restore the summer in your heart."

"It may never be, dearest Jenny. I am like a blasted pine upon a dreary heath; a Pariah, more of an outcast from his own soul than from the world without. In this hour you will curse me, Jenny, just as I shall curse myself. In this hour I may sear your heart just as mine has been seared, turn it to stone, just as mine has been turned. It is the hour of my sin, and I shrink away from the consciousness I have of the purity of your inner life. Jenny, I have loved you long and well. The passion swells my veins with fire while I speak. My companionship with you has taught me much—much of hope and faith and love.

"God does not create the intelligent mind with its powers and faculties fully formed at the beginning, with all the principles of truth apparent to thought, and all the elements of experience infolded in its consciousness. He creates it infantile. He makes the very commencement of its being dependent upon others, and then he leaves the forces that are lodged in it and that are innately prophetic of a future to be unfolded, trained and matured by the action of other minds, manifested in speech or books, by the exercise of thought, by the ministry of experience—above all, by contact with effort and disappointment. I have learned more by my companionship with you, by the action of your mind, than by effort and suffering and experience combined. But why should I speak of this? I have told you that I love you. That is very sweet. What I have to add is very, very bitter. Jenny, you can never be my wife!"

His face was very white. There was a dull, icy glare in his eyes and a perceptible shudder passed over him. Perhaps we were alike affected and alike manifested it. I felt a sudden chilliness in the air, and I caught at the window hangings for support. I did not speak for a little while. Then taking both his hands in mine and looking steadfastly into his face I said. "Leonard, what does all this mean? Why can I not be your wife?"

He took my arms and made me put them around his neck. Then he said, in a low, husky whisper, "Jenny, I am married!"

One quick, passionate embrace, one long, burning kiss, and I was alone. I seemed only conscious that the rector had staggered across the room, out of the door. Oh, the wretchedness of that hour! I never thought that one's heart could bear so much and yet not break. I felt tenfold more wretched, more unsatisfied, more sick and tired of life and the world than I did when they laid a beloved mother in the grave and later still the invalid Alice. There were no tears in my eyes. It was a grief too deep for tears. I crept up to my chamber, frightened at my own ghastliness. I prayed for strength that I might endure, for patience that I might wait, for life that I might live!

I remember my first terror of her.

Now I was able to account for many things about the rector that had seemed singular to me. His frequent absence from the parish, his sullen moodiness, her [illegible] toward me. I was [illegible] not very [illegible]. These were [illegible] been [illegible] have [illegible] are some things that the heart [illegible] rather be [illegible] or burst.

Well, months went by and the winter set in again. Mr. Jackson [illegible] attentive to me and even avoided my society. It required a mighty effort. I could read it in his [illegible] eyes [illegible]. In part I felt that I felt for the course of action he had adopted. While it made me admire him all the more, it also gave me time to fortify my own soul and reconcile it to its first great sorrow.

I have an incident of another night in March to relate. It was not a clear, starlit night, though. It was a dreary, wintry night, wondering whether it should relent into the capriciousness of April. A disagreeable rain was falling, one of those wretched compromises between snow and sleet. I was sitting alone by the fire, my pupils had retired to bed, and Mr. Ashley had gone to the adjoining village.

Suddenly the door opened, and there entered, preceded by a gust of wind almost visible in the mistiness, a young woman. She walked straight up to the grate and held her hands over it, neither speaking nor looking around her. It was this silence that made me feel so uncomfortable. A chilliness crept over me as I gazed upon her, it was not the chilliness of the rain, but the chilliness of dread.

She was scantily attired, though a heavy blanket carelessly thrown around her had in a measure protected her from the storm. Her hair was disheveled and very black. Her face was ghastly white, and her eyes dull and ghastly, like those of a drowned person when they are found open.

I cannot say that I was afraid of her. She seemed perfectly harmless, and there was an air of refinement about her that told of better days.

"It is cold," I said.

She turned around and bent her eyes upon me—no, flashed; before they were so icy, but now how they blazed!

"Who said it was cold?" she asked fiercely.

"I did," I replied in a mild tone, though I was conscious that I trembled.

"You, eh? Well, it's nothing to you or to me if it is cold! Who makes it cold? It is a nice night to those who never get out into any night at all!

How bright the fagots in this little hole
Blaze on the hearth and warm the pictured wall!

Did Campbell say that? Well, there are no 'pleasures of hope' for me—I have no hope. What makes you stare at me so? But I oughtn't to speak so gruffly; you are a woman and may help me. Tell me, do you think me crazy?"

I did not answer directly. It required an evasive answer, and one so framed that she could not detect that it was such. I still kept my eyes upon her, and said quietly: "Who said that you were crazy? Take a chair. I want to talk with you."

"Ha! ha! ha! Just like I answered you awhile ago. Well, I ain't crazy, though they say I am. I have just broke out of the madhouse. Ah! I am a good hand at strategem! There now, send me back!"

"You need not fear me. I have no reason for sending you any where. You can stay here. You are no more crazy than I am."

A warm light came into her eyes at those words, and with a little persuasion I got her to lie down on the sofa, where she soon sank into a slumber. My thoughts were varied as I gazed into that face, pale and careworn, yet beautiful still and framed in with its wealth of raven hair. My life had been a life of toil and struggling and suffering. One by one my relatives had passed into the shadowy tomb, and just then there was a great sorrow brooding in my heart, but I felt thankful that, amid all, God had still vouchsafed unto me my reason. A prayer went up in that lone, quiet room; the wind still howled dismally without, but there was a calmness in my heart. I parted the hair from her white forehead, and there were tears in my eyes as I watched her low, childish breathing.

She remained prostrated a week, subject to attacks of insanity that at times really frightened us. Mr. Ashley took as much interest in her as I did, and the children often stole up to her room during the daytime to ask how the strange woman with the white face was, just as if the faces of other women were not white.

In a week from the night upon which she came to Abernathey Hall she died. It rained on that night, too; it rained on the day we buried her; it rained on the day she was married and no doubt on the day she was born. So had been her life, always listening to the "fitful sighing of the rain!"

The rector was absent during the time our strange visitor was sick. He returned on the evening before she was buried. I heard him coming up into the study. The crazy woman was lying in her shroud in the room below, with a calm serenity upon her face and with a few choice hothouse flowers looped among her dark curls. The kind hands of little Carrie had done that.

The rector was somewhat startled when he beheld me sitting in the study instead of Mr. Ashley. He, however, reached out his hand quite cordially.

"You seemed troubled," I said.

"I have much to trouble me, Jenny," he said sorrowfully, "yet I am still thankful that God gives me strength to bear it all. You have been writing?"

"Yes, I was writing to you. It is not necessary now. You are wanted to officiate at a funeral."

"Is it possible? Any of the parishioners dead?"

"No, it is a strange woman who died here—a crazy woman."

Oh, how white his face grew! He caught at the table for support.

"Died where?" he asked huskily.

"Here, in the house," I replied wonderingly. "She is lying in the parlor, arrayed for the tomb."

He looked at me for a moment, his eyes grew very much like lamps in their vacant stare, then he took up the lamp, forgetting that he was leaving me in the darkness and passed down stairs. I fol[illegible] [illegible] and a strange shudder just then because it thrilled me with a sort of pleasure.

The rector was kneeling beside the corpse, kissing the cold lips and murmuring, "Oh, Elsie! my wife! my beautiful one!"

Again that thought flashed through my brain. She was indeed the rector's wife, and the thought would sooner shape into a certainty. There was a choking sensation in my throat, but ere I could turn away the rector saw me. He motioned me to his side, but without getting up from his knees.

"What did she tell you?" he asked.

"She told me nothing about herself or the past. I heard you call her wife."

"Yes, she was my wife. She is at rest now, and it is better for her and for me. No prayers need be offered up for a soul so kind and so good as hers was."

He said nothing more just then, which in a manner surprised me. He rose up, folded his arms and gazed steadfastly into the face of the dead. A scalding tear fell upon my hand. He seemed to have forgotten that I was near him, and I stole up into my room to weep. And in the pulpit, when he preached the funeral sermon of his own once beautiful wife, he explained it all. Many eyes filled with tears then, and the hearts of the people went out farther than ever toward their suffering pastor.

The remainder of the story is soon told. Insanity had been hereditary in the family of the rector's wife. She knew it, but had not dared to tell him of it. The dread presentiment that she would eventually fall a victim to the horrid disease draped many hours that otherwise would have been joyous ones in the blackness of night.

At last it came in the third year of her marriage, and the poor, almost heartbroken rector was compelled to send her to an insane asylum. He visited her often while there, providing many comforts for her and leaving no means untried to restore her.

Sometimes she appeared perfectly sane, meeting him with all the pleasantry of yore and asking to be taken to his heart again; at other times she would be perfectly ungovernable and charge him with the most violent abuses, and this lasted five years.

But she was dead now; she had gone to her home at last—to a beautiful home decked with stars and gorgeous in the unspeakable richness of Christ.

"And you and the rector were married in the end?" is the suggestive query.

And very meekly yet contentedly I answer, "We were."

I Wonder Why

So many women will continue to suffer when help is so near.

It is queer. They avoid society and are reluctant to make the least effort.

Further investigation discloses irregularity of periods, dizziness, faintness, accompanied by a crushing sense of bearing down and perhaps leucorrhœa. Yet they would like to be well.

Oh! why don't they believe:—

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the most marvelous cure for all this trouble. Thousands of American women are living testimonials of this great truth.

A purely vegetable remedy.

Machinist W. S. Wells, of the Pittsburg shops, has just received some fine Leghorn chickens from New York. Mr. Wells recently moved into his new house on Park avenue.

Rev. and Mrs. Chichester and child, of Los Angeles, Cal., will pass through this city this evening, riding in a special car attached to Pittsburg train No. 8. Rev. Chichester is well known to many of the Pittsburg trainmen and shopmen, having been for many years the pastor of the Second Presbyterian church at Altoona, Pa. He is now the pastor of the leading Presbyterian church of Los Angeles. The party is en route to Pennsylvania.

The earnings of the employes of the western division of the Pittsburg road, Crestline to Chicago, for the month of December fell $2,[illegible] short of the earnings of the preceding month.

The railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A. now has 9[illegible] members. Under the management of Secretary Burns the association is growing rapidly. It is the most prosperous branch of the Y. M. C. A. in Indiana.

Theodore Welch, general freight agent of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, with head-quarters in Montgomery, Ala., died suddenly yesterday. He was one of the best known railroad men in the south. Death was due to apoplexy.

The absentee list in the Pittsburg blacksmith shop contains the following names: Henry Dammeyer, Charles Stuart, A. Kauner, Henry Tonsing, Al Throckmorton, Henry Beckness, A. Grenzebach and Jule Godiway. The latter is detained at home by the sickness of some member of his family, and the others are themselves ill.

The car builders in the Pittsburg shops have just finished the construction of fifty stock cars, which are equipped with hay racks and feed troughs, and are now pushing the work of building 100 furniture cars, fifty of which have been completed. Work in this department of the Pittsburg shops continues good and the men are working full time.

For years the railroads have been rating soap as fifth class, but in effect charged freight rates as sixth class. When the railroads charged fifth class rates, Proctor & Gamble, of Cincinnati, brought the case before the inter state commerce commission and it decided that soap was sixth class freight. The railroads continued to list it as fifth class. Suit has been brought to restrain them and the case will be heard in the United States court January 21.

The fate of the Southern Passenger association will be decided at the meeting to take place at the Hotel Waldorf, New York city, on January 15. The twenty three roads which are members have all signified their intention of withdrawal. In an interview, Commissioner Stahelman, the executive head of the association, admitted that there was a probability of the organization going to pieces. The dissolution would mean the incoming of guerilla warfare among southern railways.

Railroad projectors and civil engineers who keep in close touch with new railway enterprises express the opinion that 1895 will see much more railway building than there was in either 1893 or 1894. In Indiana there are half a dozen roads, varying in length from sixty to 125 miles, which are located and rights of way secured most of the distance, and in several cases subsidies have been voted pending their being built this year. While none are very important and some probably when built will be absorbed by one of the strong lines, they mean the revival of railroad building in this state.

The Pennsylvania Railroad company has just ordered a large supply of steel rails for use in renewals and in new construction. The contracts call for the delivery of 30,000 tons of rails, and are divided between the Pennsylvania Steel company, the Edgar Thompson Steel works, the Cambria Iron company and the Scranton Steel company. It is believed that in all probability some 30,000 tons more will be ordered later in the year. In 1893 the Pennsylvania railroad used 67,000 tons of steel rails. Last year, when the amount of new construction fell off greatly in consequence of the extreme depression prevailing, only 39,000 tons were used. The price at which the contracts for the new year have been placed has not been officially stated.

BAITING A [illegible]

How a Native Hunter Succeeded in Capturing One Alive.

When we had spent 12 nights seeking to lure a tiger into one of the [illegible] traps and thus capture him alive for the great [illegible], one of our native hunters came to me one morning and said:

"Sahib, the trouble is that the tigers have grown tired of the [illegible] goats and bullocks. They are hungry for human flesh, but they can get none because the villagers refuse to move out by night. We must change our bait."

"But we can't bait a trap with a human being," I protested.

"Why not? In two weeks [illegible] I have [illegible] tigers, and tonight I will do it again. Last night a [illegible] prowled around the pit in the path crossing the [illegible] valley, but so particular that he would not [illegible]. He has laid up for the day in a thicket only half a mile away, and tonight he shall find me in place of the goat."

The idea at first struck me with a cold [illegible], but [illegible] I realized that it was simply a matter of nerve. [illegible] a nullah [illegible] a pit 10 feet long, [illegible] wide and 12 feet deep. We had covered the pit with limbs and grass and dirt, but over the center had a small platform, on which a goat was made fast. A tiger, panther, wolf or hyena springing upon the goat would break through and fall into the pit. There were no panthers about, and the wolves and hyenas stood too [illegible] for his royal highness the tiger, and they did not bother with it. There were tigers about, but they had either become suspicious or did not come upon the bait until after [illegible] was satisfied.

What the native proposed to do was to lengthen the pit by three feet and drive down stakes to partition off a space for himself at the far end. In other words, he would plan to have the tiger leap into the pit in making his spring. In lengthening the pit we dug down only four feet. A rough platform with a [illegible] covered this extension. When the man stood in the pit, his head and shoulders were above the platform. He said, as the tiger bounded at him, he [illegible] enough to sink down and [illegible] the door.

Not a white man in the whole of India would have taken such a risk, and I doubt if money could have bribed one native in 10,000. In a tree only 20 feet away we erected a platform that we might be spectators of the game. The hunter insisted on this, as he wanted us at hand to shoot the tiger in case there was any miscarriage in his programme.

There were two of us on the platform and the hunter was in his pit before the sun went down. Twilight had scarcely come when the moon showed herself, and except for an occasional spot we could have traced a mouse creeping along the path. We knew that at least one tiger had his lair in the thicket above, and night after night we had heard him growling as he came down to the nullah to drink his fill before setting out on his hunt. We had been in position about half an hour when we heard him coming. The wind was blowing toward us, and it brought his snarls and growls as he awoke from sleep and yawned and stretched and perhaps menaced a hyena who dared to look at him. Five minutes later and while he was yet hidden from sight by a turn in the path we could hear the thud of his footsteps on the hard path. He must have been very thirsty, for he came trotting along without a look to right or left, and his tail dragged behind him.

"Stop! Wait a minute!" shouted the native when the tiger was within 40 feet of the pit.

Had the animal received an electric shock he could not have been more astonished nor gathered himself more rapidly. In five seconds he was all tiger—eyes blazing, tail switching, ears up and one paw held a few inches from the ground as if to strike. As he saw that he had a man before him he growled in a way to make the blood tingle, and the native pointed at him and shouted:

"I have been waiting for you. Men have told me that you are brave, but I do not believe it. I have come out here all alone to take you by the ears and make you whine like a puppy."

The tiger was furious at hearing the man's voice. He crouched down as if to spring, but gave it up and began to sneak forward, and as he advanced his tail beat the bushes on either side of the path, and his claws grated and clicked on the hard spots.

"Don't fear for me, sahibs," called the native, and then he shook his fists at the tiger and called him names and dared him to come on.

For a long minute the beast stood directly beneath us and only 20 feet below, seemingly suspecting a ruse, and he might have gone off had not the native flung dirt at [illegible]

Married Women's Shoes.

A phenomenon of which physiologists have not given as much attention as its importance demands is the fact that the feet of women very often swell after marriage. I have known of a number of ladies who could wear a very small shoe while they were single, and very soon after obtaining a husband took to wearing shoes several sizes larger. A cynical friend of my acquaintance offers the explanation that women are naturally vain creatures, who lose somewhat of their vanity after they have once hooked a husband and go in for comfort. But I am convinced that he is not a physiologist.—Philadelphia Press.

GUESTS AT BROOKSIDE.

Entertained in Honor of the Misses Robison.

Thimble Party Given by Miss Carnahan for Visitors—Weddings and Club Affairs—Short Items.

A society event of much prominence and a great deal of pleasure was the dancing party with which Miss Bass entertained at Brookside last evening for her guests, the Misses Marie and Helene Robison, of Cleveland. The guests were received in the drawing room by Mrs. Bass, Miss Bass, and the Misses Robison. The house was decorated artistically with palms, ferns and roses and with the illumination from innumerable incandescent lights, was beautiful, indeed. At 10 o'clock the guests repaired to the ball room where Reineke's orchestra was in charge of a dance program of several numbers. The ball room is one of the handsomest rooms in this beautiful residence, and was used for the first time last evening. The floor is one to enchant the heart of the dancer, and the cosy nooks arranged at the corners of the room where frappe was served were delightful in which to spend the intermissions. The supper was served at 12 o'clock in the large dining room, where the seventy guests were seated. Among those present were the Misses Marie Robison, Helene Robison, Haidee Tyler, Mary Roe, Maud Sperry, Abbie Hubbard, Valette Rurode, Bessie Knight, Irma Searey, Bertha Jackson, Georgia Lumbard, Stella Von Sweringen, Tracy Guild, Margie Hanna, Vinnie Wood, Jessie Sale, Julia Rumsey, Lulu Laubach, Emma Ash, Theodosia Furman, Annie Robertson, Charles Olds, Helen Vanmeyver, Agnes Seabrease, Emma Rurode, Helen Knight, Kate Hoffman, Florence Barrett, Sadie Rockhill, Irene Smith, Charlotte Lowry, Ethel Hanna, Gertrude Morris, Clara Carnahan, Mary Moffat, Mamie Walton, Bessie Colerick, Cornelia Hedekin, Messrs. The Ladies Missionary society of the Grace Reformed church met yesterday and elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Charles Compart; vice president, Mrs. George Harsard; secretary, Miss Libbie Felker; treasurer, Mrs. Frank Paulus.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Hoover, of Wabash, have been the guests of Mrs. Clara Leonard and daughter, Miss Kate, at their West Washington street home, a few days this week. Mr. Hoover returned to Wabash this morning and Mrs. Hoover left for Philadelphia where she will study elocution.

Miss Caroline Russell, one of Fort Wayne's society young ladies, was married at the Cathedral, yesterday morning, to Mr. Robert Lee McNair, of Kansas City. The nuptials were solemnized by the Rev. Father Quinlan in the presence of only a few friends. The bride and groom left last evening for Kansas City, where they will make their future home.

The Woman's Club league will meet tomorrow afternoon, from 2:30 to 5 o'clock, in the parlors of the First Presbyterian church. Mrs. Virginia C. Meredith, of Indianapolis, will deliver an address, the subject of which will be "Unrest," that is, the nervous activity with which the women of the day plunge into everything. A reception will be tendered Mrs. Meredith after the address.

This afternoon Miss Carnahan, in a very charming manner, entertained a few friends with a thimble party at her East Wayne street home, in honor of Miss Abigail Hubbard, of Ashtabula, Ohio who is visiting Mrs. S. B. Brown and for the Misses Marie and Helene Robison, of Cleveland, Ohio, who are the guests of Miss Bass. The guests were asked to bring their bits of fancy work and spend an informal afternoon. Those present were: Miss Hubbard and the Misses Robison and Misses Grace Bass, Bessie Knight, Hadie Tyler, Valette Rurode, Kate Hoffman, Sadie Rockhill, Georgia and Constance Lumbard, Minnie Hoffman, Alice Ward, Mamie Evans, Agnes Seabrease, Helen and Mary Moffat.

Last evening's Huntington Democrat contains these personals: "Miss Maggie Raymond, who has been visiting in Fort Wayne the past few days, returned home last evening. She was accompanied home by her sister, Mrs. H. K. Parry.—Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Lipps, of Fort Wayne, are expected to arrive in the city this afternoon and will visit with Mr. and Mrs. Ferd Reichard, on Cherry street, over Sunday.—Mesdames J. C. Craig, C. B. Kaylor, W. P. Kitselman, B. H. Oaks and George Olmstead, of Fort Wayne, attended the public installation of the officers of the Ladies Auxiliary of O. R. C." The Herald has this: "Mrs. Mattie Dinius, of Fort Wayne, was an arrival in the city this afternoon and is entertained at the home of her brother, Mayor S. T. Cast."

Yesterday a lady friend invited Mrs. Jasper Edsall to take a drive down town, and while they were away from home Mrs. Greenlun and Mrs. Wise took possession of the house. The Woman's Relief corps had been invited, and with their baskets loaded with all the delicacies of the season, invaded her home. The company was awaiting the arrival of Mrs. Edsall, and when she opened the door, to her surprise, her house was filled with guests. The following ladies were present: Mesdames Hilton, Miller, Kintz, Hoffheson, Heals, Hunter, Lockhart, Unpsted, Williams, Snyder, White, McMaken, Graham, Krinnger, Greenlun, Brownspager, Lowes, Wise, Huff, Kinffin, Misses Greenlun, Huff, Kinffin, Hunter, Lockhart, Gindelsparger. A dainty spread was served in four courses. Mrs. Edsall entertained the ladies in her usual happy manner.

SKATED TO FORT WAYNE.

A Trip on the Ice From Huntington to This City.

Huntington Herald

George Foster, Emmet Long and Henry Stoffel skated to Fort Wayne, yesterday. There were a number who started on the journey but after traveling a few miles, dropped back, one at a time, until the three who are mentioned were the only ones to complete the journey.

The crowd started from here about 2 o'clock. After passing the lime kilns the boys say finer skating could not be asked for nearly the entire distance. Through Roanoke and Aboite the ice was in fine condition. The river narrows to about three feet in the swamps and for several miles they proceeded on the ditch until they could go no farther. The skates were taken off and they walked over to the St. Mary's river. From there on they had clear sailing into Fort Wayne, reaching there about 6 o'clock. They returned on the 9 o'clock train. The boys are a little sore from the journey but it was an enjoyable trip, nevertheless.
